

NON-CERTIFICATION / TRAINING FALL-OUT

1. Policy Statement

The Company conducts training and certification programs to prepare employees for their assigned roles and to meet the operational, client, and performance standards required for deployment. This policy establishes the rules governing employees who do not successfully complete, pass, or satisfy the required standards during training or certification programs, commonly referred to as non-certification or training fall-out.

The Company shall administer training assessments fairly and consistently while observing applicable labor laws, due process, and operational requirements.

2. Coverage

This policy shall apply to:

- Newly hired employees undergoing pre-deployment or initial training;
- Employees participating in account-specific or role-specific certification programs;
- Employees required to complete mandatory training as a condition for deployment, reassignment, transfer, or continued role qualification; and

This policy shall apply regardless of employment status, subject to the employee's applicable terms of engagement and the relevant provisions of law.

3. Definition of Non-Certification / Training Fall-Out

Non-Certification or Training Fall-Out refers to the failure of an employee to successfully complete or satisfy the required standards of a training program, certification process, or evaluation necessary for endorsement, deployment, or continued qualification in a specific role, account, program, or business unit.

Non-certification or training fall-out may result from any of the following, as applicable:

- Failure to achieve the required passing score in written, oral, practical, system-based, or account-specific assessments;

NON-CERTIFICATION / TRAINING FALL-OUT

- Failure to demonstrate the required competencies, communication skills, technical skills, or job readiness standards for the role;
- Failure to complete mandatory training modules, activities, or certification requirements within the prescribed training period;
- Failure to comply with the attendance, punctuality, or participation requirements during training;
- Behavioral, performance, or conduct-related concerns materially affecting the employee's suitability for endorsement or deployment during training; or
- Failure to satisfy client-mandated, account-specific, or business-unit qualification requirements, provided such requirements are lawful and have been communicated in advance.

4. Training and Certification Standards

All training programs shall have defined evaluation criteria and certification standards, which may include written examinations, practical exercises, mock calls, simulations, system exercises, quality assessments, communication assessments, behavioral evaluations, attendance standards, and other role-specific performance measures.

Employees covered by this policy shall be informed of the applicable training requirements, certification standards, and minimum passing criteria at the start of the training program or prior to the commencement of the applicable certification process.

Where training completion or certification is a condition for endorsement to operations, deployment, or continued placement in a role, such requirement shall be clearly communicated by the Company.

5. Outcomes of Non-Certification

Employees who do not meet the required training or certification standards may be subject to any of the following actions, depending on the employee's employment status, operational requirements, availability of roles, and management assessment:

a. Re-training or Extension of Training

The Company may require the employee to undergo re-training, coaching, or extension of the training period when management determines that the employee may still be able to meet the required standards within a reasonable period.

NON-CERTIFICATION / TRAINING FALL-OUT

b. Reassessment or Re-Certification

The Company may allow the employee to undergo reassessment, re-evaluation, or a repeat certification process, subject to training guidelines and operational approval.

c. Reassignment to Another Account, Program, or Role

The employee may be reassigned or considered for endorsement to another available account, program, or role for which the employee may be qualified, subject to operational need, client requirements, and availability of openings.

d. Placement in Another Position or Department

Where feasible, the employee may be considered for transfer or placement to another suitable position, department, or support function, subject to business need and role availability.

e. Non-Endorsement to Operations or Production

The Company may withhold endorsement or deployment to operations, production, or the intended business unit where the employee fails to meet the minimum training or certification standards required for the role, account, or program.

f. Separation from Employment, Where Permitted by Law

Separation from employment may be implemented only where allowed by law and applicable company policy, particularly where the employee fails to meet the reasonable standards established for the position after having been informed of such standards at the time of engagement, at the start of employment, or prior to the commencement of training or certification, subject to observance of due process where required.

The Company shall determine the most appropriate employment action based on legitimate business needs, the employee's training performance, account requirements, and applicable legal standards.

The Training and Quality Assurance or immediate Supervisors shall properly document all training and certification results, including but not limited to:

- Attendance and participation records;
- Assessment and examination results;
- Coaching and performance feedback records;
- Evaluation forms or certification results;

NON-CERTIFICATION / TRAINING FALL-OUT

- Training extension, re-training, or reassessment recommendations; and
- Final endorsement or non-endorsement recommendation.

Training results and outcomes shall be communicated to the employee through official notice, report, email, or other documented means.

7. Due Process and Compliance with Labor Laws

Any employment action arising from non-certification or training fall-out shall be implemented in accordance with the Labor Code of the Philippines, applicable regulations of the Department of Labor and Employment, and relevant Company policies.

Non-certification or training fall-out shall not automatically result in termination of employment.

Where separation from employment is considered due to failure to meet training or certification standards, the Company shall observe the applicable standards of notice, documentation, and due process, particularly where the employee is already under an employment relationship.

For probationary or similar employment arrangements, failure to meet the reasonable standards of the position may be a ground for non-regularization or separation, provided such standards were made known to the employee at the time of engagement or at the start of employment.

8. Non-Diminution and No Waiver of Rights

Nothing in this policy shall be interpreted to reduce, waive, or diminish any right or benefit granted to employees under applicable laws, regulations, employment agreements, or other valid Company policies.
